

Leading With Safety

Leading With Safety

A 1-day programme designed for supervisors and managers working in UK paper mills to enable them to hone their safety and leadership knowledge and skills.

You are working in an industry today where it is common for some mills to operate for one, two, three or more years without a lost time accident.

Our industry is such that the machines, equipment and materials we use all have the potential to cause life-changing harm and people are injured less often today because we are better at controlling the risks associated with these hazards.

Whether you are driven by financial, legal, or moral imperatives - or more likely a combination of all three - good safety leadership counts and is good for business.

Benefits

By the end of the programme participants will:

- Understand how to confidently undertake a risk assessment by following a five-step process
- Appreciate that injury prevention requires a layered approach to risk control
- Know that each person's perception is their reality
- Differentiate between leading and managing and hone their skills in both areas
- Recognise that a combination of leadership and employee involvement brings results
- Know what stops them and their teams of people from creating an injury-free safety culture built upon appropriate behaviours
- Realise that if others can make and finish paper for several years without serious injury then so can they
